

Presentation Reflection

Weekly Report 12

11/5 - 11/11

During this prior week, my main focus was on preparing for my research presentation which included creating a helpful visual aid.

The research presentation was a great opportunity to bring all of my research together in a meaningful way that could be successfully presented to other individuals in an interesting manner. Also, the research presentation allowed me to sharpen my public speaking skills and fix certain things in a safe environment. Before the presentation though, creating the visual aid was demanding, because the visual aid needed to be engaging, helpful, appealing, and not contain too many words. Fortunately, I was able to create an engaging visual aid, however, some feedback suggested that I make the font bigger on the slides and also consider adding some photos to add some creativity. During the presentation, I was able to maintain a nice flow to my explanations with the rare usage of flashcards, which made me realize that instead of having only two flashcards, I should memorize those parts in order to create a more professional vibe from my presentation.

In total, my presentation was very successful and useful because it showed me some small things that I can easily fix in order to guarantee an even better presentation in the near future. For this upcoming week, my goal is to contact at least four new professionals through calls and I will attain their information through LinkedIn. In order to help with the process of getting an interview, I will make sure to sound professional and concise when talking to professionals in the consulting field.
