

Self Review

Weekly Report 18

1/21 - 1/27

During this past week, my focus primarily revolved around looking back at my progress in ISM up until now. My self review focused primarily on my achievements, growth, skills, and future.

To begin my review touched upon how setting goals at the beginning of ISM was a struggle for me because I was unaware of what my capabilities were. My goals chosen ended up being challenging, and although most of them were achieved, my goal of getting a mentor by December 21st was not met, however, this didn't define my progress and growth in ISM throughout the year. My talents, relating to both professionalism and personality, have grown and changed as this year in ISM has progressed. ISM has taught me to become more independent and proactive because ISM showed me that all success attained for something is reflective of the amount of work that is put into it. This has allowed my public speaking and interpersonal relationship skills to improve greatly due to the importance of these skills to become successful in my career field. Personally, my procrastination has decreased and proactiveness increased because ISM taught me that time management, organization, and preparedness are indicative of the amount of success that one can achieve and the potential for growth that one has.
